LEASING HANDOFF AUDIT

Eight checks for your leasing handoffs

Use this audit to find missing owners, vague statuses and work that looks complete before the next team can act.

1. Keep one household reference

Attach the inquiry, booking, application and signing record to the same reference.

If two records don't clearly match, pause for review instead of letting AI choose.

2. Name the source of each answer

Use approved property facts for replies.

Check who updates them when policies change; a polished message still fails if it quotes yesterday's information.

3. Separate booked from attended

A calendar confirmation proves an appointment exists.

Record tour completion separately, with an owner and timestamp, before treating the showing as finished.

4. Define an application-ready file

Agree which information and documents the reviewer needs.

Missing evidence creates a follow-up task; submitting a form doesn't make the file complete or approve the renter.

5. Separate evidence from the decision

AI extracts sourced facts.

Configured rules check criteria.

The authorized manager records the rental decision.

A criteria result must never masquerade as that person's approval.

6. Use confirmation, not assumption

Lease sent and lease signed need different statuses.

Update completion only when the signing service confirms the event for the correct application.

7. Give waiting work an owner

For an unsigned lease or missing document, record who acts next and when to follow up.

Failed delivery needs an exception, not another silent waiting status.

8. Don't collapse signing into move-in

Keep required funds, unit readiness and authorized access separate from signatures.

Define applicable conditions with your operations team; the demo doesn't perform these possession checks.

A REUSABLE WORKSHEET

Use this handoff record

Household reference.	Current stage.	Completion evidence.
Next action.	Owner.	Follow-up time.
Exception.

Fill it in for one recent file; an empty field shows what to investigate.

SAMBHAV JAIN