The work between an inquiry and a lease

A quick reply starts the conversation. The operational work continues through scheduling, application review, a manager's decision and signature confirmation.

First, answer the question

The renter asks about the home. The reply uses approved property facts, records the inquiry and keeps unsupported promises out of the conversation.

A booking isn't an attended tour

The selected slot becomes a calendar booking. Attendance is a separate event; a confirmed appointment must not silently become a completed showing.

An application isn't a lease

The renter submits information and documents for review. The system organizes those materials; submitting the form doesn't grant approval or create a tenancy.

The manager makes the decision

Extracted values carry sources. Configured rules produce a criteria result. The manager reviews the file and records the rental decision; AI doesn't choose the applicant.

Sent isn't signed

An approved template goes to the signing service. The signature callback updates the record only after completion is confirmed, not when an email is sent.

Less chasing. Clearer handoffs.

The design keeps the next step, owner and status visible. This demo stops after a confirmed test signature and welcome message, before physical move-in.
